In the first quarter of 2026, the power semiconductor industry remained robust, driven by strong demand from downstream application sectors such as artificial intelligence, new energy vehicles, energy storage, and industrial control. The Company seized market opportunities, focused on its core businesses, actively implemented its product leadership strategy, and drove both year-over-year and quarter-over-quarter growth in revenue by continuously refining its high-value-added product portfolio through R&D. Notably, the Company's automotive electronics segment experienced explosive growth, serving as the core driver of performance growth. Furthermore, the Company's R&D investments yielded significant results, with the proportion of high-end products continuing to rise, leading to an increase in gross margin compared to both the same period last year and the previous quarter.
